

PROLIFE FACTS

2017 marks a tragic anniversary for England and Wales as it is now fifty years since the 1967

Abortion Act was passed. The passing of this Act has enabled a staggering 8.7 million unborn children to be killed by abortion in these countries over the past fifty years. To mark this tragic occasion and raise awareness of the ongoing need for protection for women, families and unborn children, members of the SPUC 50th Anniversary Team are coordinating a year long programme of events and educational opportunities aimed at ensuring greater awareness of the current situation and equipping concerned members of society to make a difference. As part of this, a "50th Anniversary Tour" will take place, during which visiting speakers with expertise on a range of relevant topics will be available to address groups. SPUC will support local initiatives by: providing help and guidance in planning meetings; offering advice on publicity, providing materials and resources and information on a political strategy for having the plight of unborn children heard in Parliament. The 50th Anniversary of the Abortion Act provides a very real opportunity to raise awareness of the need to defend vulnerable unborn children in England and Wales, and to save lives.
