

PROLIFE FACTS

In early March, there was a flurry of online media commentary echoing the Abortion Law Reform Association of NZ's call for abortion on demand as a "health issue". The same call was made in Queensland's state parliament by Cairns MP Rob Pyne, with a private members Bill, but with a glaring difference. The NZ pro-abortionists deliberately fudged the gestational age, so as not to create a public backlash. But Rob Pyne had no such fears and his Bill called for legal abortion up to full gestation – that is up to birth. 55,000 Queenslanders signed petitions against the Bill and thousands marched outside Parliament. There were 2,800 submissions to the Parliamentary Enquiry with 80% opposed to the Bill. People prayed fervently. The clincher came when Rob Pyne checked the numbers in Parliament. He discovered he didn't have the political support and withdrew his Bill on February 17th – defeated. Two lessons for New Zealand: pro-abortionists really want abortion up to birth and Rob Pyne and his allies are now pushing for a Law Commission review, hoping the judges will support their agenda.
